Educating children in modern society requires skill and comfort with information technology. Gender and Computers: Understanding the Digital Divide presents evidence that shows that girls and young women are being left behind on the road to information technology.

"Gender and Computers: Understanding the Digital Divide ...

A preponderance of the studies discussed by Cooper and Weaver deal only with gender in computer games, but most computer work does not include the competitiveness of games. Most recreational use of computers now is on the Internet, where gender has a very different role (Kennedy, Wellman, and Klement, 2003). Further, Bird and Jorgenson (2003) found that among working-class families, men were
