ABSTRACT: Diffuse pollution of urban groundwater can be a threat to domestic water supplies and a challenge to water and land management. Diffuse pollution of shallow groundwater in the Harare urban area, Zimbabwe, was characterised through an investigation of seven sites within the metropolitan area: two industrial sites, a semi-formal Groundwater pollution is a serious problem throughout the African continent. While this is not surprising, very little attention has been paid to the problem. Information on this threat to Africa's future is therefore not readily available.

This book is a collection of thirty peer-reviewed papers on the topic, and provides a first glimpse of the situation across the continent. The first
