Two flats, two murders, but one killer? There was no lack of suspects but investigation showed that those who might have killed one, almost certainly could not have killed the other. Patiently Curwen prepared to follow a dozen possible lines, but Stanton crossed the lines and caught the killer in the tangle.

The plot of this one spins around two murders that happened at the same time, in two flats on the same staircase, and probably by the same person. Although there seems to be no possibility whatsoever for the murderer to do this, as a worker was on the landing in front of one of the flats all the time, and the murderer was not able to leave the flat. So the reader has not only two murders here
