Around 1970 there are new problems. The economy has done well, but it could have done better. Moreover other industrial economies did better, and eventually this came to be reflected in the balance of payments. There seemed to be a vicious circle: delayed growth weakened the balance of payments, and measures to improve the balance of payments caused further delays.

The only problem with the story in the FAA newsletter about corrosion in the carb is that it was not the corrosion in the carb that caused the engine stoppage. In addition to the corrosion there was a sticky substance in the carb that held the piston open in spite of gravity and the spring trying to close it. When he applied full power for take off the piston was pulled up into the dome. Then writing.upenn.edu

That seems correct for public money, but then private industry gets millions of dollars and aside from a few dissenting voices, everybody's for it. Hmm. Fwiw, I've spent some time looking at US and UK funding models, and I think the Australian system looks pretty good in comparison (although it also looks pretty poor in relation to some imaginative European models): it's pretty fair, all Problems of a Mature Economy by etc. Hardback Book The ...
